3rd Teachers' Day: Spoken Grammar

Workshop Peter Tischer

How to find and use oral materials for the classroom

All the materials you need for teaching listening comprehension are right at your fingertips -- if they happen to be placed on your computer keyboard, that is. The web is full of useful and interesting audio files, so the problem is not so much availability but rather finding what your students need and integrating it in their study program. Therefore, this workshop will take a closer look at the types of resources and at the tools you need to take authentic oral language to the classroom.
